- This highly illustrated monograph covers the work of Coco Raynes, a Boston-based graphic design firm, focused on wayfinding/signage, universal design, exhibit/graphic design, visual identity/branding, donor recognition, and jewellery
- Includes more than 650 photographs, plans, and diagrams that showcase in detail more than five decades of work
- The presented designs describe the results of innovation, particularly in terms of problem solving: from facilitating general orientation through wayfinding/signage and accessibility for sight-impaired visitors/travellers in museums or general public spaces, to long-range maintenance
- Each project is presented with its requirements, difficulties, and constraints. The emerging solutions also address the manufacturing techniques

Multi-award-winning designer Coco Raynes’s work showcases a sophisticated graphic vocabulary and design language – be it logos, interiors, architecture, signage. Her problem-solving designs are industry game-changers: accessibility for blind travellers; solutions through manufacturing innovation, including long-term maintenance. Five decades on, her inspiring work continues to articulate a purity of invention and vision.
