- The unique fusion of fine arts and ceramics
- Bissier and Bampi were both masters of their trade
- A close examination of an often overlooked subject

In the 1950s, a large number of internationally renowned artists created pictures made of ceramic. In 1956, in close collaboration with the artist and ceramicist Richard Bampi, Julius Bissier developed a ceramic work for the University of Freiburg. The abstract composition on a wall in the city centre measures over 19.5 metres long by 2.6 metres high (64 × 8.5 feet). Its restoration and relaunch is occasion to examine more closely the story of its genesis. The distinctiveness of the artwork becomes clear against a backdrop of the cultural politics oriented on France in Freiburg after 1945. Unexpected parallels in contemporaneous ceramic murals by Fernand Léger, Joan Miró, and Victor Vasarely are revealed and make the Freiburg ceramic picture a unique work in the post-war art of Germany.

Das Freiburger Keramikbild

Auf einer Fläche von 19,5 m Länge und ungefähr 2,6 m Höhe entstand das Freiburger Keramikbild im Jahr 1956 aus der Zusammenarbeit von Julius Bissier und Richard Bampi. Es ist ein abstraktes Werk, das aus tausenden von kleinen Keramikstücken besteht, die in verschiedenen Farben und Formen angeordnet sind. Das Bild ist eine einzigartige Mischung aus Kunst und Handwerk, die die Fähigkeiten beider Künstler zeigt.
