- This innovative approach of a new and radical cross-sector collaboration between photography, poetry, and agroecology is certain to pique interest and draw in a large audience from across a range of fields
- This book follows the Gaia Foundation’s highly popular previous We Feed The World exhibition and book
- Extensive and diverse audience already reached: 45,000 attendees at WFTUK exhibitions & events across the UK
- Featured on BBC Radio 4’s ‘The Food Programme’
- The Gaia Foundation is an international charity with major outreach and a huge number of collaborating partners built over four decades of experience accompanying the Earth’s best custodians to revive and protect biocultural diversity

We Feed The UK is an acclaimed storytelling campaign, pairing photographers and poets with the UK’s most inspiring custodians of soil, sea, and seed.

We Feed The UK brings together over 40 collaborators from the environment and arts sectors to share time-critical stories across urban, rural, and coastal areas. These include multi-generational, Black-led growing projects in London, a majority-women workers cooperative in Edinburgh, and sustainable fishing along the south coast. Their encounters are diverse, moving, and unexpected: 10 powerful stories sowing seeds for a future where regenerative practices are the roots of our future resilience.

Through these tales planting the seeds of change, We Feed The UK is laying the groundwork for a just, safe, and liveable tomorrow. The message is one of hope, showcasing grassroots solutions to climate change, the biodiversity crisis, and social justice.

The Gaia Foundation is an international charity with four decades of experience accompanying the Earth’s best custodians to revive and protect bio-cultural diversity.
