- A photographic series in a search for traces in the still landscapes of winter

An impressionistic shimmer of dark smears on backgrounds of bright expanse. Patterns of scattered marks and feathery plexus on white ground. Horizontal and vertical bands combining into a constructive composition on a white field. A frame in white, in which a white plane expands like an empty canvas. On closer inspection, the abstractions fill with concrete details: birds have left delicate prints on a snowy field, condense into swirling sheets in a white realm. Brown and green form stripes on a snow-covered pasture. Winter trees bear branched ornaments. The developed landscapes and urban terrains, captured vertically from heights of hundreds of meters, are 'ready-mades' – visual discoveries whose aesthetic potential is revealed and recognized through the detached viewpoint.
